

Hybrid vehicles are extremely complex machines with some components very different from the familiar internal combustion vehicles and from the new but becoming familiar electric vehicles. This class is an attempt to explain how they work and to survey the field from the first attempts in the early twentieth century to the latest state-of-the Formula 1 race cars.